Millions of Americans today are overfed and undernourished. How can that be?

When they don’t have access to grocery stores, many Americans turn to their local corner stores for their food. Unfortunately, what they find there is often a lack of healthy food and an abundance of inexpensive, processed foods, high in sugar, fat, and salt.

As a result, America is facing a childhood obesity rate that has tripled in the last 50 years. As a center for community food access, corner stores could be one of the solutions to this epidemic.
